 Wild Fruit Mine s but a syrinx rough, Won from a reed-bed by an unknown river. Would that it were enough To make one heart throb or one eyelid quiver; But here s no song of might, No thunder from the height. Mine s but a frail of rushes Filled with wild berries from a lonely path Gathered off humble bushes. From no sweet, sunshine-haunted, golden garth They come. No treasure these Of far Hesperides. And yet full many a thorn Hid in the tangled boughs whence they were brought. I have been stabbed and torn; Even for these uncultured fruits I fought. Taste, ere with coming night They are forgotten quite. About the
