Excerpt: .has not yet found a suitable place, he may be permitted to make himself more perfect in that one which he prefers. Our introduction of this mechanical instruction seems almost providential in view of the scareness of apprenticeships. Up to almost the end of the year 1884 metal work alone was taught, and during that year only about one-third of the boys who left college entered into mechanical pursuits; of those who left during 1885, and since instruction in ordinary wood work and turning has been introduced, two-thirds have obtained work in mechanical Occupations. 4. The Philadelphia Manual Training School. The Philadelphia Manual Training School was opened in September, 1885, with about one hundred and twenty-five pupils. The object of the school as stated in the second annual catalogue is the education of all the faculties. The whole boy is put to school. He learns...
